THAT DREAMBOAT

THERE was a buzz of excitement as the girl students passed out of the Assembly Hall one morning. Whispers and giggles filled the air, and a few sighs were also audible.

"Did you ever see such a dreamboat?"

"Gosh, No . . . I think he just came to Bradley High from another town! Ohhh, what eyes!"

"And did you notice the curly hair . . . and doesn't he have the most scrumptious shoulders?"

It was obvious that Bill Baker had made quite an impression with the girls who discovered the "new boy in town" sitting nearby as they sat in Assembly that otherwise-ordinary morning. Assembly had never been like this, and the girls were of the general opinion that it was surprises such as Bill Baker that made school life interesting! Apparently, however, Bill had heard some of the whispers, and had turned around to face the girls for a minute, and then, turning beet-red, had changed his seat.

"Didn't he look absolutely adorable when he blushed? Hmmmm, it sure would be super to date him!" sighed Sandra, hugging her history book as if it were the man in question.

"Me, too!" echoed the four girls who walked beside Sandra. Sandra brightened suddenly as an idea flashed thru her mind, and she turned to her friends. "Girls, we all want to date Bill Baker. Let's make a bargain . . . the first gal among us who gets to date him, gets, let's see . . . A NEW HAT!"

Wilma scowled. "Phooey . . . who wants a new hat? Let's make it three pairs of stockings, and it's a deal!"

The girls agreed, and the race was on.

The next few weeks went by in a fast pace, as the girls scrambled to win the attentions of Bill, but it was a tougher fight than any of them had expected. Over five cokes, one afternoon several weeks after the contest began, Sandra and her friends discussed what progress they had made. The expressions on the five faces were mighty glum, and the conversation was filled with gloom and discouragement.

"It's simply awful! That dreamboat may be handsome, but he sure knows how to give a girl the run-around!" mourned Wilma. "I even managed to juggle my classes around so I could be in his English class, but every darned time I get near him, he starts to blush and keeps his eyes glued on the teacher."

Marsha was equally as disappointed. "You think you're having bad luck, Wilma? Listen to this. My pop gave me two tickets to the All-Star game at the Stadium, but do you think Bill would take a hint? I told him I had the tickets when I managed to say a few words and get acquainted one day in study hall, so what did he do? He said 'thanks' and took the two tickets! And there I was, confused and speechless. Ticketless, and DATELESS! Phooey!"

"But this tops everything!" Sandra stared into her coke coldly as she related her experience. "Yesterday I discovered that Bill Baker had been transferred to my History Honor class, and darling Mr. Johnson seated dreamboat right next to me. But could I make any headway? Bill passed me a note and when I opened it, was it a request to meet him after school for a soda? NO! He wanted the homework assignment he had forgotten to copy from the blackboard earlier that period!"

"Didn't you say anything, then?" screamed Wilma.

"Sure . . . I gave him the assignment, and Mr. Johnson kept me after class for whispering. And if that wasn't enough, when I stayed in my seat after class was over, Bill just started to come over to apologize and tell Mr. Johnson what had happened, when swiftly, Willie Jones pulled him away for basketball practice. Wait'll I get my hands on that Willie!"

The other two girls in the booth had sad stories to tell, too, about their failure to date Bill. The five friends sipped sadly at their cokes, and twisted the straws in the agony of their plight.

"B-Bill B-Baker!"

"Huh? What did you say, Marsha?" questioned Sandra.

"He's h-here! B-Bill's here! St-standing in the doorway, c-coming in HERE! Ohh, he's such a d-doll!"

The five pairs of eyes shifted to the door, where Bill Baker stood with The Infamous Willie Jones. He started to enter, when Willie took his arm, and as the girls heard him say, "C'mon, Baker, I'll give you a lift home . . . my jalop's around the corner. We have some coke home, so we can talk about the team schedule there!" All hopes died.

"That is the last straw . . . girls, we are not destined to date Bill Baker. I'm going home and read a good book," wailed Sandra, as she left her friends and started home.

EVERYONE SAYS, WHEN THE GOWN IS SHOWN...
WHAT A PITY IT'S NOT HER OWN!

When Sandra reached her house, her Mother was preparing supper. "Hope you're not planning anything for tonight, Sandra dear . . . Dad and I are going to the Wilsons' for a canasta game, and I want you to take care of your little brother."

"Hmm. Why, no, I'm going to be home, reading a book. Guess I'll wash my hair after I do my homework."

After dinner, Sandra's mother and father left her with the dishes to be done, and after she had put little Tim to bed, she washed her hair as she had planned. She spent half an hour putting it up in tiny pin curls, and as she was planning to stay home that evening, she didn't bother to put a scarf over the curls.

"Hmmm, sure wish I was going to a movie with Bill Baker tonight instead of staying home and minding Timmie! Oh, well, guess I'll give myself that cold-cream treatment as long as I'm at home."

In a short while, Sandra was settled on the couch, a book in one hand, an apple in the other, a mass of bobby pins in her hair, and a mask of cold cream on her face.

Suddenly, the door bell rang. "Darn, probably some friend of Mom's or maybe one of the girls is here to keep me company?"

Sandra went to the door and opened it.

"OOOHHHH, NO! B-BILL BAKER!"

Bill Baker gulped as he looked at the girl standing inside, her mouth open in utter desperation. Of all the times to get friendly, he had picked the night when Sandra was hardly in any condition to make an impression on anyone. Under the mask of cold cream, Sandra turned purple in embarrassment.

"Hi-Hi, Sandra."

"Hi-Hello, B-Bill. Won't you come in?"

The moment Bill was in the living room, Sandra hastily excused herself and ran upstairs, where she swished off the cold cream, and quickly tied a scarf around her hair. She took a moment to regain some composure, and then went downstairs again.

"G-Guess I sorta got you into trouble today, didn't I?" said Bill.

"It was r-really n-nothing! I didn't mi—I mean, did you come over to ask me any question about the homework for tonight? I have it all done, and if you want any of the answers..."

Bill nervously straightened his tie, apparently a little uncomfortable because of his mission. "No, I just wanted to apologize for running out on you. I should have explained to Mr.

just being friendly."

Sandra interrupted Bill with a coy laugh, and hoped he hadn't noticed the guilt she had tried to hide in the laugh.

Bill continued, "... so, I guess I sorta avoided all of them. I don't know how I ever got up enough courage to come here and speak to you, but I guess I knew I shouldn't have left you in that rut while I ran off to basketball practice. So, here I am!"

Sandra smiled at Bill, and was just about to offer him some candy, when he said, "Say, did you know that I live only a few blocks from here? That's how I knew where you live. I passed your house several times coming home from school and very often saw you sitting on the porch. Guess you didn't recognize me. But, since I walk here on the way home every day, I could walk with you, that is, if you want. And maybe tomorrow we could stop off at Pop's for a soda."

Sandra was delirious when the dreamboat left, but checked the urge to call the girls. "Time enough tomorrow!" she thought.

And the next afternoon, when the girls stopped by Sandra's home room to go for cokes at Pop's, Sandra gaily said, "Go ahead girls, I'll see you there later."

Then minutes later, as the girls sat in their favorite booth waiting for Sandra, they gasped as they saw her come in with Bill. They gasped a second time when Sandra and Bill started to come past their booth to the counter. Suddenly, Bill's long legs accidentally tripped Sandra, and as she began to fall, he held her arm protectively.

"Gee, Sandra, I'm sorry, I made you rip your stocking! I guess I'm always apologizing for something!"

Sandra looked down at her torn stocking, but looking up again at her four friends who were now staring unbelievably, laughed, "Oh, it's okay, Bill..." and winking at the girls, added "It's alright! I'm getting three new pairs tomorrow!"
